

Hyaluronic acid is a natural super moisturizer. In humans and animals, its primarily found in skin, joints, and connective tissues - that acts as a powerful hydrating agent that can hold up to 1,000 times its weight in water. It hydrates tissues and is essential for keeping the skin firm, plump, and elastic. It is used extensively in cosmetics and pharmaceuticals to reduce wrinkles, repair the skin, and accelerate wound healing.

Hyaluronic acid is a key component of the gel-like substance that permeates the collagen-elastin framework of the skin and gives it cohesion and resilience. It is also involved in tissue repair as well as cell proliferation and migration.
